
Contents

Foreword	ix
Introduction	xiii
Part 1. Ambiguity and Responsibility	1
Chapter 1. The Possible and the Necessary	3
1.1. The formal and the transcendental, or the logical point of view	3
1.2. Conditions and determinations: a matter of freedom	6
1.3. The concept of the possible	8
1.4. The duplicity of contingency	12
1.5. The concept of the necessary	13
1.6. Elements of effectiveness and ethical innervation	15
1.7. A situation, a context and a world	20
1.8. Efficiency and effectiveness: philosophical freedom	20
Chapter 2. Pre-determination Figures	23
2.1. Modes of objective constraint	23
2.2. An unorthodox use of “possible worlds”	27
2.3. Ontological truth and processual effectiveness	32
2.4. Definitorial point of view and determinism	33
2.5. The meaning of the definitorial position for the relationship between efficiency and effectiveness	34
2.6. An ambiguous responsibility	36
2.7. The ascent into the possible	39
2.8. Responsibility: a limit to ontological discourse.	40

Chapter 3. A Processual Effectiveness	43
3.1. A process of the possible	44
3.2. The open totalities	45
3.3. Propensities	46
3.4. Distinctions (or contingent partitions)	47
3.5. A drape of the possible	47
3.6. Ethical innervation	48
3.7. The viability of the possible	48
3.8. The circulation of the possible	49
Chapter 4. Universality and Responsibility	53
4.1. Unlike phenomenology	53
4.2. Measuring gaps from Hegel	58
4.3. The finite will	59
4.4. Reconciliation in situation	61
4.5. Autonomy	63
4.6. The question of the relevance of the conditions (effectiveness)	65
4.7. The universal within plurality	66
4.8. The originarity of language	68
4.9. An assumption in consciousness (detachment)	70
4.10. Consciousness and attachment	74
4.11. Political pluralism and comparability of value systems	76
Conclusion to Part 1	81
Part 2. Four Criteria of the Effectiveness of a Process	91
Chapter 5. Summary of What was Learned in Part 1 Using the Example of GMOs	93
5.1. The transcendental: four categories of the definitorial, a test for the thought of the process	99
Chapter 6. The Responsibility of a Meeting: China	105
6.1. The common thread: a project led by INRA in France, between 2001 and 2003	112
6.2. Four objective criteria of the universal	114
6.2.1. “Sincerity” as a criterion	114
6.2.2. The “non-separation” criterion (from the “framework”)	119
6.2.3. The “viability” criterion	124
6.2.4. The “non-attachment” criterion	129
6.3. Four types of “fall of the drape”	134

Chapter 7. Obstacles to an Ethical Consideration of the Drape . . .	139
7.1. Overcoming the question of a normative nature	139
7.2. Obstacles related to the concept of a normative nature	140
7.3. Normativity in thinking about the process.	142
7.4. Another fall of the drape in Europe: the loss of “wisdom”	143
Chapter 8. Objectively Ethical Processes	145
8.1. Practical wisdom.	145
8.2. Ethical knowledge.	147
8.3. Judging	148
8.4. Christianisms and processes	149
Conclusion to Part 2	155
Part 3. Demystifying the Invisible Hand	163
Chapter 9. The Limits of the Freedom of Neoliberals	165
9.1. Myth and ideology.	165
9.2. Teleology and immanence	168
9.3. Five objections to the Invisible Hand	171
9.3.1. Conatus and freedom.	171
9.3.2. Logics and elements	174
9.3.3. Negativity and bias	177
9.3.4. Balances and mathematical temporality.	179
9.3.5. Univocity and ambiguity	180
9.4. Towards a global responsibility	183
9.5. Note on “genealogy”	186
9.6. Note on ultra-liberal “freedom”	188
Conclusion to Part 3	191
Conclusion.	197
References	203
Index	211