
Contents

Introduction	xi
Stéphane LE LAY, Emmanuelle SAVIGNAC, Jean FRANCES and Pierre LÉNEL
Part 1. Theoretical Discussion and Empirical Examination of “Gamification”	1
Chapter 1. Paradoxes of Gamification	3
Gilles BROUGÈRE
1.1. Game and play	4
1.2. Gamification as a deconstruction of the play	5
1.3. Contents and play elements	7
1.4. Gamification: an old practice	8
1.5. Extension of the notion of gamification	9
1.6. Language or reality	11
1.7. What existence for play?	12
1.8. Counter-example of flow or optimal experience	14
1.9. Play and frame issues	15
1.10. Hybrids and hybridization processes	16
1.11. Conclusion	17
Chapter 2. Gamification and its Discontents: The Mechanics of the Game and the Question of the Game’s Operability in Game Design Texts	19
Emmanuelle SAVIGNAC
2.1. Research context and methodological discussion	21

2.2. Game mechanics from the point of view of game design	23
2.2.1. Convened references and models	23
2.2.2. Game mechanics and the approach to the game in game design	25
2.2.3. System, control and player representation	26
2.3. Game mechanics from the point of view of gamification and the question of the transposability of game logics in non-game contexts	29
2.3.1. The centrality of the question of engagement in the reference texts	29
2.3.2. The game mechanics approach by gamification	34
2.3.3. The question of transposability	39
2.4. Conclusion	42
2.5. Appendix: profile of the authors from the corpus	43
2.5.1. Breakdown by discipline	43
2.5.2. Extra-academic activity	44
2.5.3. Geographical distribution of authors.	45
Part 2. Socialization Through Play	47
Chapter 3. The Origins of the Gamification Process: The case of Pre-industrial Societies	49
Elisabeth BELMAS
3.1. Beginnings of the gamification of learning	52
3.2. Gamification and the civilizing process	55
3.3. Play, mathematics and gamification: the scientification of modern societies	60
3.4. Conclusion	65
Chapter 4. Reward Chart for Using the Potty? Justifications and Criticisms of “Gamified” Child Rearing	67
Victoria CHANTSEVA
4.1. Gamified devices of toilet training	71
4.2. “Short-term winning”, “another failure”: resistance to gamification	75
4.3. “Stickers are only stickers”: “good parenting” to the rescue of gamification	77
4.4. Conclusion	81

Part 3. Bodies and Subjectivities Involvement	83
Chapter 5. Digital Engagement Technologies? The Interplay of Datafication and Gamification in Quantified Self Activities	85
Éric DAGIRAL
5.1. The formats of gamification in self-tracking devices	88
5.1.1. Playing the gamification card: putting data traces into play	88
5.1.2. Setting goals, notifying and focusing attention	89
5.1.3. Rewarding to motivate: scores, badges and challenges of software systems	91
5.1.4. Making visible: comparing, sharing and chatting about self-tracking activities	92
5.1.5. Scripting practices, suggesting paths for exploration	93
5.2. Shaping engagement inside and through self-tracking devices.	95
5.2.1. Engagement technologies at the crossroads of behavioral psychology, cybernetics and the datafication of human	95
5.2.2. Engaging and maintaining the user in his or her sensors.	97
5.2.3. To quantify oneself in order to play with oneself?	98
5.3. Conclusion	101
Chapter 6. The “Gamblification” of Life or the Extension of the Gambling Domain: Words from Passionate Gamblers in France and Belgium.	103
Aymeric BRODY
6.1. Surveying gamblers and collecting their life stories	105
6.2. Concept of gamblification	106
6.3. For a broader definition of the concept.	108
6.4. Some limits to the broadening the scope of the concept.	109
6.5. An invasion of life through play	110
6.6. Gambling development.	112
6.7. The case of amateur poker players	114
6.8. The case of so-called compulsive gamblers.	119
6.9. Conclusion	125

Part 4. The Political and Social Extensions of Play Through Gamification	127
Chapter 7. Politics and Video Games: Presidential Elections and the Gamification of Partisan Mobilizations	129
Éric TREILLE
7.1. Activist gamification or political parties out of the game	132
7.1.1. Geek candidates in spite of themselves	132
7.1.2. Targeting an economic sector and its employees through the gamer public	135
7.2. The gamification of activism or political management through gaming	139
7.2.1. François Bayrou in 2011 or the mocked pioneer	139
7.2.2. Hillary Clinton in 2016 or the acceleration of political managerialization.	141
7.2.3. A trompe-l'oeil Americanization of recreational applications in French political life	143
7.3. Conclusion	144
Chapter 8. Datagames: Questioning About the Unproductive Criterion of Play	147
Julian ALVAREZ
8.1. Introduction.	147
8.2. Serious games and gamification.	151
8.2.1. Serious game concept	151
8.2.2. Gamification concept	152
8.3. Datagames: approach and contributions	156
8.3.1. Datagame concept	156
8.3.2. Crowdsourcing concept	156
8.3.3. Datagames: a direct contribution for the player	157
8.3.4. Datagames: a redistribution of direct benefits to players.	159
8.3.5. Different types of datagames	160
8.3.6. Case of the game with data redistribution only	161
8.3.7. Active and passive collection.	163
8.3.8. Inventory of the different types of datagames	164
8.4. Conclusion	165

References	167
List of Authors	191
Index	193