
Contents

Foreword	xi
Acknowledgements	xvii
Introduction	xxi
Part 1. Issues, Forms and Processes of Otherness	1
Introduction to Part 1	3
Chapter 1. The Stakes of a Problematic Otherness	5
1.1. A fashionable notion but very dispersed	5
1.1.1. The proliferation of a polysemous term	5
1.1.2. Loss of meaning or polysemy?	9
1.2. The challenges of otherness in education and training	13
1.2.1. In education	14
1.2.2. In training	24
1.3. Otherness, a Socially Acute Question in the educational sciences	30
1.3.1. Socially relevant issues in educational sciences	30
1.3.2. A socially lively otherness between trends and controversies	32
1.3.3. A challenge or a necessity?	38
1.4. Conclusion	40
Chapter 2. The Forms of Otherness	41
2.1. External otherness	41
2.1.1. Absolute otherness	42
2.1.2. Between conflict and encounter	43
2.1.3. The experience of the face	45

2.2. The inner otherness	46
2.2.1. The breaking of the subject	46
2.2.2. Identity alterations	47
2.2.3. Identity over time	48
2.2.4. The voice of an alienated consciousness	49
2.2.5. Unconsciousness, desire, language and knowledge	50
2.3. Epistemological otherness	54
2.3.1. The unspeakable unknown	54
2.3.2. Philosophical origins	57
2.4. Conclusion	63
Chapter 3. The Process of Teaching Otherness	65
3.1. The concept of Otherness	65
3.1.1. Three-dimensional Otherness	65
3.1.2. A discussed meta-category	70
3.1.3. A schematization of Otherness	71
3.1.4. Usefulness of the concept	72
3.2. Teaching Otherness	73
3.2.1. The lessons of external otherness	74
3.2.2. The lessons of internal otherness	76
3.2.3. The lessons of epistemological otherness	77
3.3. A risky but essential process	84
3.3.1. Under different philosophical constructions...	84
3.3.2. ...the same process...	87
3.3.3. ...with its lessons and risks	88
3.4. Conclusion	90
Part 2. Thoughts About Otherness	93
Introduction to Part 2	95
Chapter 4. External Otherness, Educational Work and Holiness	97
4.1. An educational work	97
4.1.1. The meaning of education in Levinas' work: "getting out of" in order to "go towards"	98
4.1.2. Five educational movements	100
4.1.3. The work or liturgy	106
4.2. Holiness	107
4.2.1. Election	107
4.2.2. Substitution	108
4.2.3. A non-religious transcendence	110

4.3. For a new humanism to be transmitted through education?	112
4.4. Conclusion	114
Chapter 5. Inner Otherness and the Object of Research	115
5.1. The researcher's involvement	115
5.1.1. Subjectivity, involvement, transfer and countertransference	116
5.1.2. The different types of unconscious phenomena at play in research	118
5.1.3. The difficulty of making one's own research text visible	120
5.2. Personal projections, transfers and countertransfers	121
5.2.1. The apprentice researcher's unconscious projections on the object of research	121
5.2.2. Transfer from the apprentice researcher to the thesis supervisor	123
5.2.3. Countertransfers from the apprentice teacher-researcher.	126
5.2.4. Awareness, writing and scientific visibility	128
5.3. A clinical investigation	129
5.3.1. Methodology	129
5.3.2. Clinical labels	130
5.4. Conclusion	138
Chapter 6. Epistemological Otherness and Non-being	141
6.1. The forbidden way of non-being	142
6.2. Non-being, a succession of paradoxes?	144
6.2.1. Non-being as an ontological paradox	145
6.2.2. Non-being as a linguistic paradox	147
6.2.3. Non-being as a logical paradox.	150
6.2.4. Non-being as a philosophical paradox.	154
6.2.5. Non-being as a semantic paradox	157
6.3. Non-being thought between literary fiction and philosophical knowledge	161
6.3.1. A literary fiction of non-being?.	161
6.3.2. A philosophical knowledge of non-being?	164
6.4. Why think of non-being today?	173
6.5. Conclusion	176
Part 3. Transfers of Otherness in the Educational Sciences	179
Introduction to Part 3.	181
Chapter 7. Didactizing Otherness	183
7.1. The conditions for a didactic approach to Otherness.	183
7.1.1. Necessary and sufficient conditions for a didactic approach to Otherness	183

7.1.2. Analysis and discussion of these six conditions	185
7.2. Is Otherness didactic knowledge?	193
7.2.1. Towards a didactic problem.	193
7.2.2. Otherness and didactic knowledge.	194
7.3. Perspectives of didactic research specific to Otherness	203
7.3.1. The didactic system	203
7.3.2. The didactic triangle	204
7.3.3. Didactic transposition	206
7.3.4. Scientific knowledge, expert knowledge or a social reference practice?	206
7.3.5. The teacher's epistemology	208
7.3.6. Epistemological obstacles.	209
7.3.7. Students' conceptions	210
7.3.8. Didactic, a-didactic and non-didactic situations	210
7.3.9. The didactic contract	211
7.3.10. Devolution	212
7.3.11. Didactic phenomena	212
7.3.12. Didactic time.	213
7.3.13. Topogenesis	213
7.3.14. The environment	214
7.4. Conclusion	214
Chapter 8. Educating for Otherness	215
8.1. Another "education for" or an education other than itself?	215
8.2. A Levinasian education?	217
8.2.1. A dialectical education.	218
8.2.2. Perspective of the transfer of the Levinasian work in education	221
8.3. A Meinongian pedagogy?	224
8.3.1. For a pedagogy of the unknown	224
8.3.2. The unknown, part of the fifth Morinian knowledge	227
8.3.3. Exploratory implementation in elementary school	233
8.4. Conclusion	241
Chapter 9. Training for Otherness	243
9.1. Legitimacy of professional training in Otherness	243
9.1.1. The problem of professional training in Otherness	243
9.1.2. Epistemologically valid knowledge outside Parmenidian thought	246
9.1.3. Professionally useful knowledge for professionals	247
9.2. A paradoxical pedagogy to train for Otherness.	249
9.2.1. Paradoxes in training.	249
9.2.2. The Levinasian paradox of impossible transmission	255

9.2.3. Transmitting the idea of impossible transmission in adult education.	260
9.3. An Otherness training engineering project	264
9.3.1. Analysis of training needs.	265
9.3.2. A proposal for the engineering of training in Otherness	272
9.4. Training for Otherness through research.	272
9.4.1. Characteristics common to any Master's report supervision.	277
9.4.2. Specific characteristics for supporting theses about Otherness	277
9.5. Research perspectives.	280
9.5.1. Identifying real practices of Otherness and training.	281
9.5.2. Prescribing ideal practices of Otherness and training.	283
9.6. Conclusion	286
Chapter 10. Evaluating (with) Otherness	289
10.1. Otherness in evaluation	289
10.1.1. Paradoxical place of Otherness in new evaluation models	289
10.1.2. The Other of evaluation	291
10.1.3. The evaluation-measurement of Otherness	295
10.2. Evaluating and interpreting with Otherness	296
10.2.1. Interpretation, meaning and Otherness.	297
10.2.2. Otherness as value in the professionalization process.	301
10.3. Application: evaluating and interpreting textual otherness	304
10.3.1. Background information	304
10.3.2. Findings.	306
10.3.3. In search of the lost third party	307
10.3.4. For what effects?	310
10.4. Conclusion	312
Conclusion	313
Postface	325
References	329
Index of Names	353
Index of Notions	359