
Contents

Acknowledgements	ix
Foreword	xi
Michael BUCKLAND
Introduction	xv
Chapter 1. Hyperdocumentation According to Paul Otlet	1
1.1. The different levels of hyper in hyperdocumentation	3
1.1.1. Hyperdocumentation as an extension	4
1.1.2. Hyperdocumentation as accumulation.	10
1.1.3. Hyperdocumentation as an increase in documentary forms	12
1.2. Hyperdocumentation as reduction	13
1.3. Hyperdocumentation as hypertext	16
1.4. Hyperdocumentation as a new world order	18
1.4.1. A hyperdocumentation between utopia and dystopia	21
1.4.2. Between classification and synthesis	23
1.5. The ultimate perspective of the documentation.	25
Chapter 2. Hyperdocumentation as a Triumph of Documentality	29
2.1. A documentary theory of humanity.	30
2.1.1. A philosophical theory of humanity	30
2.1.2. Homo documentator	31

2.2. Documentality or social ontology	32
2.3. Documentality and memory	35
2.4. Documentation and authority	37
2.5. A hyperdocumentary era	39
2.6. A document theory	41
Chapter 3. Hyperhuman or Hypermachine?	45
3.1. Desiring machines?	47
3.2. Typology of hyperdocumentary machines.	50
3.3. Towards hyperdocumentality?.	57
Chapter 4. Towards Hyperdocumentary Regimes	59
4.1. The documentary regime of Otlet's time	60
4.2. Changes in documentary regimes	67
4.2.1. Between memory and knowledge carriers	68
4.2.2. Hypermediation	69
4.2.3. Probability regimes	71
4.2.4. Regimes of confession and conversion	72
4.2.5. Regimes of monumentality	74
4.3. Post-Otlet documentation regimes	78
Chapter 5. Between Knowledge Indexing and Existence Indexing	85
5.1. An index question	87
5.2. The two faces of indexing	90
5.3. The need for an indexing ethic	92
5.4. A long history of indexing	95
5.4.1 Tension among those involved in documentation	97
5.5. Between documentarity and monumentality	102
5.6. Which indexation regime?	104
5.7. Should we stop indexing?	105
Chapter 6. Personal Documentation: Between "The Self" and "Myself"	111
6.1. Renewal of personal documentary practices	115
6.2. Self-documentation	118

6.3. Self-demonstration or self-documentation.	122
6.4. Documentary freedom under constraints	128
6.5. Hypodocumentation or the concept of sousveillance	132
Chapter 7. The Hyperdocumentalists of Our Lives	135
7.1. The hyperdocumentalists of self	138
7.2. From the found friend to the “caring” lover.	141
7.3. Computing centers or archive centers	143
7.4. Post-mortem hyperdocumentation	147
7.5. Post-human hyperdocumentation?	149
Chapter 8. Documentation of All the Senses	155
8.1. Hyperdocumentation as documentation of all the senses	155
8.2. Beyond the senses?	158
8.3. Paranormal hyperdocumentation	162
8.3.1. The hyperdocumentation of the sixth sense	162
8.3.2. Charles Fort	167
8.4. Political meaning?	169
8.5. Indexation of desires	173
Chapter 9. Free (or Open?) Hyperdocumentation	177
9.1. Which hyperdocumentary forms are “open”?	178
9.2. Documentation as resistance.	181
9.3. Hyperleaks?	184
9.4. Hyperdocumentary convergence: the OSINT.	186
9.5. Utopia or dystopia?	188
Chapter 10. Conclusion: Is it Necessary to Go to San Junipero?	191
10.1. A continuous confrontation between ancient and modern?	192
10.2. Between documents and monuments: Promethean vertigo	194
10.3. Towards an ethical hyperdocumentation, the challenge of moderation	196
10.4. Preserving the links, nexialism against hyperseparatism	197

Postface – Beyond Otlet: Fragmented Encyclopedism 201
Jean-Max NOYER

References 235

Index 247