
Contents

| | |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| Foreword | ix |
| Acknowledgments | xiii |
| Introduction | xv |
| Part 1. Esthetics and Esthesia: Touristic and Gastronomic Practices and Places | 1 |
| Introduction to Part 1 | 3 |
| Chapter 1. Esthetization of Taste | 5 |
| 1.1. Esthetization of taste for and by tourists | 5 |
| 1.1.1. The “invention” of tourism, linked to the pleasure of taste | 5 |
| 1.1.2. Taste – a socio-spatial and cultural marker | 10 |
| 1.2. The taste of “the wild” and the example of meat and hunting | 16 |
| 1.2.1. What can be said about meat consumption in France? | 16 |
| 1.2.2. Hunting – an identity marker | 19 |
| 1.2.3. Tourism – the savior of hunting? | 25 |
| 1.3. An iconic taste: the “taste of the mountain” | 29 |
| 1.3.1. Contemplative thought, taste and the definition of a new tourist resource | 29 |
| 1.3.2. Macrosocial scale: the identification of a “common”: the “taste of the mountain” | 34 |
| 1.3.3. Microsocial scale: culinary identities of chefs | 40 |
| 1.3.4. Spatial dynamics and the establishment of tourism for the taste of the mountain. | 44 |
| 1.4. Conclusion | 46 |

| | |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Chapter 2. The Esthetization of Places and Environments and the Connected Tourist Mobility | 47 |
| 2.1. The contribution of human and social sciences (specifically, geography) to the understanding of tourist mobility linked to gastronomy. | 48 |
| 2.1.1. The necessary geographic, cultural and social reinterpretation of mobility and gourmet tourism practices. | 48 |
| 2.1.2. A reconfiguration of starred restaurants in France? | 51 |
| 2.1.3. Tourist imaginaries and their socio-spatial dimension. | 54 |
| 2.2. Traveling for the pleasure of taste at local level: the (starred) restaurant at the heart of practices and imaginaries of gastronomy. | 57 |
| 2.2.1. One-star restaurants “are worth a visit”: between excellence and finesse | 57 |
| 2.2.2. Two-star restaurants are “worth a detour”: sophistication and exceptional nature. | 61 |
| 2.2.3. Three-star restaurants are “worth a special journey”: theatricality and uniqueness of gourmet tourist destinations | 67 |
| 2.3. Traveling for the pleasure of taste at local scale in a concentric logic: the scale of the city and/or tourist resort | 75 |
| 2.3.1. Megève – a center with multidimensional tourist projections. | 75 |
| 2.3.2. Courchevel – a center driven by seasonal tourism and gastronomy | 78 |
| 2.3.3. Val-d’Isère/Tignes – an intermediary model? | 82 |
| 2.4. Traveling throughout the region for the pleasure of taste | 86 |
| 2.4.1. Networks being formally established, but informal paths | 86 |
| 2.4.2. As-yet hesitant coordination among the various actors | 88 |
| 2.4.3. Towards regional structuring? | 90 |
| 2.5. Conclusion | 91 |
| | |
| Part 2. Structuring of Gourmet Tourist Destinations: The Example of the Savoie Region, in France | 93 |
| | |
| Introduction to Part 2 | 95 |
| | |
| Chapter 3. Certification and Heritagization of Gourmand Food | 99 |
| 3.1. Certifying the quality and origin of products and/or producers: a crucial step from the point of view of tourism? | 99 |
| 3.1.1. Territorial labeling and territory brands, in the service of tourism? | 99 |
| 3.1.2. Towards a definition of circumstantial and/or structural gastronomic trends. | 109 |
| 3.2. Certification for and by tourists – the example of Savoie | 120 |
| 3.2.1. Networking of actors: reinforcement and/or construction of supply chains, driven by starred chefs. | 120 |

| | |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 3.2.2. Defining quality in or outside of networks: the example of labels in the wine world | 125 |
| 3.2.3. Strategies for certification with limited means: territorial brands. | 132 |
| 3.2.4. Collective identifications and concerted dynamics: the challenge of collective brands | 138 |
| 3.3. Inhabiting places in a space–time that is out of the ordinary: heritagization of gastronomy for and by tourists. | 144 |
| 3.3.1. When tourists – through their discourse, imaginaries and practices – bring about heritagization: the example of FACIM | 144 |
| 3.3.2. Inhabiting spaces touristically: a condition sine qua non for the co-construction of heritage linked to gastronomy. The example of Les Bauges. | 146 |
| 3.4. Conclusion | 151 |
| Chapter 4. Establishing the Conditions Necessary for Local Development on the Basis of Gastronomy. | 153 |
| 4.1. Definition of local development | 153 |
| 4.2. Collective gastronomic identification – the example of the foothills of Savoie | 155 |
| 4.2.1. Aix-les-Bains – Riviera des Alpes – from one identity to another: well-being redefined by gastronomy | 155 |
| 4.2.2. In the foothills of Savoie, constructing a local taste preference in order to set oneself apart. | 160 |
| 4.2.3. Territorial development shaped by Michaël Arnoult. | 165 |
| 4.3. The call for a collective cultural identity: the example of Opinel | 174 |
| 4.3.1. Mountains and workshops on the establishment of tourism in the cutlery industry | 174 |
| 4.3.2. The “gastronomization” of Opinel. | 177 |
| 4.3.3. The winning revaluation of an entire product range | 179 |
| 4.4. Conclusion | 180 |
| Part 3. Around the World in Gourmet Tourist Destinations | 183 |
| Introduction to Part 3 | 185 |
| Chapter 5. Sector-Specific Approaches: An International Perspective | 187 |
| 5.1. Strength, issues and risks attached to sector-specific approaches | 187 |
| 5.1.1. An overview of sector-specific approaches to the offer of solid refreshment | 187 |
| 5.1.2. An overview of sector-specific approaches to liquid offerings | 189 |
| 5.2. Analysis of sector-specific approaches linked to a solid offer | 190 |
| 5.2.1. Olive tourism | 190 |

| | |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 5.2.2. Cheese tourism | 192 |
| 5.2.3. Pescatourism | 200 |
| 5.2.4. Truffle tourism | 202 |
| 5.2.5. Other more anecdotal examples: tourism driven by bread, pasta, spices, etc. | 205 |
| 5.3. Sector-specific approaches linked to a liquid product | 210 |
| 5.3.1. Brewery and beer tourism | 210 |
| 5.3.2. Spiritourism | 214 |
| 5.3.3. Tea tourism and coffee tourism | 218 |
| 5.3.4. Cacao tourism | 222 |
| 5.4. Conclusion | 224 |
| Chapter 6. Gourmet Tourist Destinations Intersecting with Tourist Projects | 227 |
| 6.1. At the crossroads between real estate and business projects: gourmet tourism and the reinvention of cities | 228 |
| 6.1.1. In France, different urban strategies. | 228 |
| 6.1.2. Internationally, gastronomy at the heart of urban strategies. The example of Lima – “world capital of gastronomy” | 234 |
| 6.2. ... to the necessary formation of a network of cities with an international outlook | 239 |
| 6.2.1. The UNESCO Creative Cities Network – City of Gastronomy: institutional recognition; the example of Rouen in France | 240 |
| 6.2.2. The Food Capitals network: mobilization of the political élites in favor of a cultural policy for gastronomy? | 243 |
| 6.3. Conclusion | 247 |
| Conclusion | 249 |
| References | 253 |
| Index | 279 |