
Contents

Introduction	xi
Marie-Louise MARTINEZ
Part 1. The Object as a Third Party in Education and in Training . . .	1
Chapter 1. The Object as a Third Party in Social Mediation Relationships – Study of a School Facility: The Table in Role-play	3
Jean-Louis BOUTTE and Sophie PINAZO
1.1. Introduction.	3
1.1.1. The place of the third party	4
1.1.2. The third object	5
1.1.3. A systemic approach	5
1.1.4. Our hypothesis	6
1.2. Research method.	7
1.2.1. The situations observed	7
1.2.2. Our methodological facility	8
1.3. Results.	9
1.3.1. An evolutionary trend	9
1.3.2. A contrasting situation	10
1.4. Discussion	11
1.5. Conclusion	12
1.6. References	12

Chapter 2. The Text's Others, the Otherness Text: The Text as a Third Object in Training 15

Muriel BRIANÇON

2.1. Introduction.	15
2.1.1. The text's others	15
2.1.2. Textual otherness, mediation and the third party	16
2.1.3. The problem of fullness and emptiness	17
2.2. Theoretical framework	17
2.2.1. From cognitive mediation to semiotic mediation	17
2.2.2. Semiotic thirdness	18
2.2.3. The mediation of interpretation.	19
2.2.4. The third party and otherness	20
2.3. Data collection and processing	22
2.4. Findings	23
2.4.1. One observation: the multiplicity of interpretations.	23
2.4.2. The indicators of thirdness	23
2.4.3. In search of the lost third party	24
2.4.4. For what effects?	27
2.5. Conclusion	29
2.6. Annex: "All the knowledge in the world"	30
2.7. References	31

Chapter 3. The "Third Object" Tool in a Professional Counseling Situation 33

Valérie GUILLEMOT and Christine POPLIMONT

3.1. Introduction.	33
3.2. Positioning	34
3.3. The investigation phase, the data: Jules and self-drawing	35
3.4. Case analysis	36
3.4.1. The case of Jules: the object as a trigger for a passage to get out of repetition	36
3.4.2. The case of Julia: the object as a trick to hide the lack of problematization	38
3.4.3. The case of Karine: the object as permission to explore the possibilities resulting from problematization	39
3.4.4. The relationship with tools, at the crossing of two empirical approaches.	41
3.5. The results	42
3.6. Conclusion: training the counselor to question themselves about professional genre.	43
3.7. References	44

Chapter 4. The Portfolio as a Third Object in Didactic and Self-study Systems 47

Caroline LADAGE

4.1. Introduction.	47
4.2. Being trained at the heart of professional practices	48
4.2.1. Learning at work	48
4.2.2. Narrative in training: what mediating effects can be observed?	50
4.2.3. A training mechanism as a third object	53
4.3. An approach inspired by the Anthropological Theory of the Didactic	55
4.3.1. The notion of praxeology as a key point	55
4.3.2. The work of didactic analysis and of praxeological analysis	56
4.3.3. The choice of the portfolio as a learning mechanism	57
4.4. The research medium	59
4.4.1. Analysis of the results	59
4.4.2. The discourse concerning the portfolio exercise.	60
4.4.3. Discussion	61
4.5. Conclusion	62
4.6. References	63

Chapter 5. Self-assessment in Road Safety Training Programs: The Role of Attributional Style Questionnaires as Third Objects 65

Christine POPLIMONT and Guylaine MOLINA

5.1. Self-assessment in road safety education	66
5.1.1. The pedagogy of experiencing	66
5.1.2. Educational practices and reflexivity	68
5.1.3. The norm of internality	69
5.2. Methodology	70
5.2.1. Questionnaire	70
5.2.2. Assessment guidelines	71
5.2.3. Experimental design, participants and predictions	71
5.3. Results.	72
5.4. Conclusion	73
5.5. Appendix	74
5.6. References	76

Part 2. The Subject as a Third Party in Education and in Training 79Chapter 6. Towards the Deployment of a Pedagogical Action in Dialogue as a Mediating Instance in the Teaching–Learning Environment 81

Pierre USCLAT

6.1. Introduction	81
6.2. The ergological approach to the activity and the key role of the mediating instance	82
6.3. Teacher and student activities: towards an ambivalent mediating instance	88
6.4. The four phases of care as the frame for a mediating instance in the teaching–learning situation	92
6.5. Conclusion	97
6.6. References	97

Chapter 7. Reciprocity and Reversibility of the Personal Third Party: Learning Through a Game of Postures 99

Emmanuel NAL

7.1. From the mediating being to the personal third party, a dialectic of being and doing	100
7.1.1. The third party, an irreversible fraction?	100
7.1.2. The personal third party, an embodiment of the third being	101
7.2. The reciprocity of the personal third party and its educational perspectives	103
7.2.1. Reciprocity and its implications	103
7.2.2. Reciprocity in Lupasco’s perspective on antagonism	104
7.2.3. Placing this conception of reciprocity into an educational perspective	106
7.3. Learning to become a third party in the experience of circularity: the reversibility of the third in the case of the reader–author–text triad	108
7.3.1. Reversibility: definition and clarification of the concept of third-party reversibility	108
7.3.2. The reversibility of authorship in relation to the text: interpreting and translating	109
7.4. Conclusion	112
7.5. References	112

Chapter 8. Reversing the Scapegoat Process by Integrating the Previously Excluded Third Party in Education 115

Marie-Louise MARTINEZ and Tommy TERRAZ

8.1. Introduction. 115
 8.2. Anthropological insights on the scapegoat 117
 8.3. Some current scapegoat figures 121
 8.4. The reversal of the scapegoat towards the integration of the previously excluded third 123
 8.5. Axiological and praxeological avenues for an educational ethics 126
 8.6. Conclusion 128
 8.7. References 129

Chapter 9. The Third Landscape as an Educational Third Place and a Third Time, Between the City and Nature 133

Gilles DELESQUE

9.1. Introduction. 133
 9.2. The third landscape 134
 9.3. Third-party pedagogy 136
 9.4. Third citizenship 142
 9.5. Conclusion 146
 9.6. References 147

Chapter 10. General Information on the Need for the Symbolic Third Party in the Masonic Institution’s Educational Process via the Myth, the Rite and Otherness 149

Stéphane BLANCHARD†

10.1. The symbolic third and metacognition 151
 10.2. From the symbolic third to “mediating” 154
 10.3. Symbolic third party and mediality 155
 10.4. Conclusion 158
 10.5. References. 159

Conclusion 161

Marie-Louise MARTINEZ

List of Authors 175

Index 177